

ACC Releases Three-Year Rotation Conference Games Only Men's Basketball Schedule

Release at 2:00 p.m., Thursday, February 17, 2005

GREENSBORO, N.C. – The Atlantic Coast Conference released today the conference games only portion of the league's men's basketball schedules for the 2005-06, 2006-07 and 2007-08 seasons.

For the next three seasons, each of the league's 12-member schools will play a 16-game conference schedule that includes two primary partners and nine rotating partners. Each team will play its two primary partners once at home and once on the road for a total of six games in each of the next three seasons.

Each team's remaining nine rotating partners will then be formed into three groups of three teams and rotated annually on a three-year basis. One of the three-team groups (A) will play a home and away series that year, while a second three-team group (B) will be that team's home games that season and the third three-team group (C) will be that team's road games.

The following year, the three three-team groups will be rotated so that group B will be that year's home and away series teams, while group C will be the home game opponents and group A will be the road game opponents.

After the third year of this schedule each of the primary partners will have played each other six times with three home and three road games. In addition each of the nine rotating partners will have played four games against their non-primary partners, including two home and two road games. The model below ensures that every institution will face each conference opponent at least four times over the next three seasons.
