CANHAM NATATORIUM

CELEBRATING WITH THE FANS

The University of Michigan continues its commitment to athletic excellence with the Donald B. Canham Natatorium, home of the Wolverine water polo and swimming and diving teams. Considered one of the finest college-owned aquatic facilities in the nation when it was constructed in 1988, a renovation in 1998 returned the facility to its original grandeur, if not surpassing it.

The 59,000-square foot facility houses a 50-meter pool, eight lanes wide, that can be divided into two separate 25-yard pools by movable bulkheads. On the east end of the mezzanine level is one of two full-service training rooms on the U-M athletic campus, which includes physical therapy modalities, a cast room, running pool and physician examination rooms. One of Michigan's three weight training and conditioning facilities is also located in the natatorium in addition to a hot tub adjacent to the diving well.

Canham Natatorium also features a team room that houses team meetings and allows athletes a place to study and relax. The room features full audio/video equipment, two computers with internet connection, desks, couches and a kitchen.

With a seating capacity of 1,200 people, Canham Natatorium provided the stage for the 2004 and 2010 CWPA Western Division Championship, the 2005 NCAA Women's Water Polo Championship and the 2008 CWPA Eastern Championships. The Wolverines hosted the 2001, 2003 and 2009 CWPA league games.

Since its inception in 2001, the Michigan water polo program has called the natatorium home. The Wolverines didn't ease into the home slate, challenging the nation's top ranked team, Stanford, on Feb. 17, 2001 in their first home game as a varsity squad. The Wolverines lost 17-3 to the Cardinal but a tradition of coming out of the gate against stiff competition was born. U-M earned its first victory at Canham on March 24, 2001, with a 15-5 triumph over Slippery Rock. Since then, the Wolverines have posted a 55-16-1 record at home.

Suspended around the pool are numerous banners recognizing the success of Michigan's previous water polo and swimming and diving teams. In only its second season as a varsity sport, the water polo team claimed its place amongst the rafters, winning a CWPA Southern Division and Eastern championship. The Maize and Blue now proudly hang seven division and three Eastern Championship banners inside the natatorium.

Completed in 1988 at a cost of approximately $8.5 million, Canham Natatorium underwent comprehensive renovations in 1998 to ensure its presence well into the 21st century. A new roofing system was installed, while the ventilation system was revised to reflect greater concern for the health of athletes. The pool received new filtration equipment and piping that is completely resistant to corrosion. In addition, ceramic tile was installed on the interior of the pool, creating an environment that is more conducive to faster swimming. Finally, a state-of-the-art lighting system for the competition pool area was installed, permitting lighting levels to be adjusted based upon the level of activity in competition.

The natatorium is named for former Michigan athletic director Don Canham, who retired from his post in June 1988. Canham was an NCAA high jump champion for Michigan in 1940 and went on to coach the men's track and field team before becoming Michigan's fifth athletic director in 1968.
