The annual AT&T NABC Guardians of the Game awards show is the event where the most outstanding coaches and players in men's college basketball are honored. The highlight of the annual National Association of Basketball Coaches (NABC) convention, held in conjunction with the NCAA® Final Four®, the awards show features appearances by the two coaches whose teams will battle for the NCAA championship; coach and player of the year recipients from NCAA Division I, Division II and Division III; and Division I awards for defensive player of the year and big man of the year. Four individuals will receive Guardians of the Game awards, representing the core values of NABC members – service, advocacy, education and leadership. The show, hosted by Tim Brando of CBS Sports, concludes with the presentation of the Naismith Trophy, presented by AT&T, to the nation's most outstanding player.
